The Gerontology Professionals of Long Island

The Gerontology Professionals of Long Island (GPLI), first formed in 1990, has served as a networking and educational center for nurses, social workers, service providers, educators, advocates, students, and scores of other professionals who serve the aging population in Nassau and Suffolk Counties.

A professional membership organization, the GPLI, through its Executive Board, plans and conducts year round programs for the members with the goal of expanding their knowledge of current trends and future developments in the field of aging. With meetings held at different locations pertinent to services for the aging, including a light supper, members have the opportunity to generate relationships with colleagues, while at the same time participating in educational programs designed specifically to learn about new and prospective developments within the field of gerontology.

The Gerontology Professionals of Long Island arranges at least four meetings/programs annually where the membership can experience some of the unique settings offered by providers of aging services. Members enhance their understanding from presentations and lectures given by experts knowledgeable in topics of interest related to gerontology services and though networking among the membership, can introduce themselves and their business or agency – to facilitate helpful professional relationships.

The Health Care Executives' Club

The Healthcare Executives' Club (HEC), founded in 1958 as a not-for-profit professional membership association, is dedicated to providing its members with a forum that contributes to their contemporary and relevant knowledge within the administration, management and organizational delivery of health and human services. Among other guiding principles, the Healthcare Executives' Club promotes and communicates the values and ethics associated with effective leadership qualities in the provision of health and human services for diverse populations and communities.

With a commitment to preserving the HEC's traditional mission for collegial education, as well as social and professional development among members from multiple leadership positions and organizations providing for the health and human services of local populations, the Healthcare Executives' Club conducts a schedule of meetings and programs throughout each year. In addition to regularly meeting with the general membership and keeping them apprised of the Club's ongoing activities and benefits, the Healthcare Executives' Club arranges dinner gatherings to foster relationships and present programs facilitating knowledge and skills for the membership. Speakers and panels of experts in different aspects of the health and human service delivery environment address topics with information specifically pertinent to the learning and career development needs of the HEC's membership. The Club also compliments these educational programs with membership participation in social/holiday gatherings, community/charity endeavors and collaborative projects with academic institutions and other professional associations.

The HEC's membership represents professionals from hospitals, ambulatory care, nursing homes, assisted living, home care, supportive consultants/vendors and many other parts of the health care delivery system and the Club promotes progressive and dynamic programs for the membership's benefit - often at provider and academic locations in the metropolitan area.
